OCTOBER. The scholar drops his book and pen To mix with visions sober
The gargeous tints of hill and glen—
The pallet of October!

For, Jacob-like, the waning year, With patriarchal passion, Gives to the month supremely dear His many-colored fashion.

To this conspired the buds of Spring, And all the months and seasons; Their sheaves to his the eleven bring In dutiful obeisance. Earth finds no bluer, fairer skies,

Since June's, the gentle-hearted; Each bough suspends some sweet surprise, In pay for gifts departed. 'Tis sweet when May's young leaves unfold

To drink her charmed caresses. To-day the forest's fire and gold Our inmost being blesses. So, scholar, let thy dream fulfill-Add blissful thought to sober; And greet, when Life and Joy o'erspill.
